

Remember the power of three

Published on: 9 August, 2018 | Author: Investment Team

When the markets rise we get annoyed if we haven't forecast it. Equally when it falls all of us at Tacit Investment Management get mad that we ever invested in the first place. It's a phenomenon known as 'the psychology of missing out.' It's our human fear of being left behind. And of course it occurs in everyday life whenever we make investment decisions.

Following a period of strong equity market returns it's important to remember why we invested and what our ultimate objectives are. At Tacit if you're one of our investors we've a three-pronged approach designed to help you understand which of our strategies is most suitable for you. These three factors provide a longer term perspective of your requirements along with your ability to reach a given goal based on equity market history.

The first of these approaches is your eventual objective for your investment. Do you need to grow it, receive an income from it or maybe you're seeking a bit of both? Understanding your purpose and your timeframe is our first priority.

Second is your attitude to risk. Behavioural studies show that investment losses hurt us far more than gains can make us happy. This loss aversion is vital to understand as it leads to poor decision making at tough times. For example, selling out investments following the market falls of 2008 would have locked in significant losses and after a while be seen as a poor investment decision. Understanding how you would react to something like this will help you and your advisors mitigate these risks.

Thirdly is your capacity for loss itself. This is technical but is best described as your ability to incur short term losses in your investment portfolio whilst persevering with your longer term objective. For instance, if you as an investor require a set income from your investments then you'll have a lower capacity for investment losses than someone who is currently saving and adding to their investments.

It's vital to remember that everyone is an individual and the solutions to the three elements vary from one person to the next. When markets have been rising it's easy to forget about your own objective and chase the short term returns. Human nature dictates this and try as we might we can't change human behaviour.

At Tacit we've learnt that understanding this power of three before investing followed by a reminder of your investing objectives is vital to ensuring that you achieve your specific longer term goals.

This can lead to some difficult conversations, but we don't and never will apologise for putting your best interests first at all times. Marrying our knowledge of markets to your individual requirements sits at the very heart of the Tacit decision making process.

Important Information: Any views, insights, or commentary are for general information only, do not constitute personal investment advice or research, and are intended for UK residents. They may not be appropriate in all jurisdictions. While sourced from information we believe to be reliable, we make no guarantee as to accuracy or completeness. Past performance is not a guide to future results, and the value of investments can go down as well as up.

Regulatory Disclaimer: Tacit Investment Management is the trading name of TIML Limited (No. 9228395), part of Tacit Holdings Limited (No. 10611211). Both companies are incorporated in England and Wales, with the registered office at 14 Hanover Square, London W1S 1HN. TIML Limited is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA ref. 670184) and approves and issues this communication under Section 21 of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. Please note, tax and estate planning services are not regulated by the FCA.